

COMPASSION

Caring enough to do something about someone else's need

MEMORY VERSE | John 3:16

COMPASSION CHALLENGE:

It's Christmas week, so you might be thinking, how can I find time to show compassion THIS week? Well, there's really no better week than this one to take on a compassion challenge as a family. Wait until after you've opened any presents you're exchanging for this challenge. (Don't exchange gifts as a family? You can still play!)

This week's challenge will require some creativity. Grab a sheet of paper and draw a line down the middle. On one side, as a family, make a list of as many needs around you that you can think of. Then, on the other side, make a list of all of the gifts each of you received. Once both lists are complete, match some of the needs with the gifts. For example, maybe you know of a mom with a lot of kids who seems a little overwhelmed. Could you take over your new play set to play with the younger kids one day to entertain them and give the mom a break? (If you didn't exchange gifts, go down the list of needs and write a way you could meet the need with items, talents or skills you possess.)

Come up with as many combinations of your gifts and the needs as you can. Then each person should choose one way they can use their gift to meet a need and act on it this week!
