FOOD for THOUGHT :

Right now you're probably thinking about hot chocolate more than lemonade, but when the hot summer rolls around, many kids have lemonade stands to make money. Noah Burnison is one such kid, but Noah isn't raising money to keep it. He is giving the money he makes to an organization who previously gave Noah and his family a huge gift. Noah was diagnosed with cancer last year, and thanks to the generosity of Lighthouse Family Retreat and their donors and volunteers, Noah and his family were able to attend a seaside retreat with other families living through childhood cancer. Noah's family was helped so much by attending the retreat that he wanted to help other families get to the retreat as well. Each glass of lemonade that Noah makes and sells gets a family closer to having their day made!

What are some of the things that Noah is giving away with his lemonade stand? Who else is generous in this real-life story? Noah feels he was given so much that he wants to give to others. What have you been given that you can share with others?

Just for
